Approved for Re-opening
French Quarter, New Orleans, Louisiana,
October 2005

“The ongoing efforts to rebuild and transform the Gulf Coast for all of its citizens and communities require focused, collaborative, and inclusive strategies. We are proud that NYRAG can play a role in helping funders leverage their work for the long-term benefit of the region.”

Ronna D. Brown, President, New York Regional Association of Grantmakers

Since the publication of the first edition of the Donors' Guide to Gulf Coast Relief & Recovery in June 2006, there have been many changes in the Gulf Coast region—schools that lay destroyed and vacant for so many months have been rebuilt and are now filled with the voices of children; hospitals that were so vital in providing healthcare to the working poor are again operational; and more than 66 percent of those who lived in New Orleans prior to the storms have returned to their beloved city.

But so much has not changed.

The voices of our most vulnerable Gulf Coast populations—the elderly, the disabled, the poor and working poor, and those of color—still struggle to be heard in the recovery and rebuilding process. More than 28 months after Katrina and Rita made landfall, thousands of people in Louisiana and Mississippi still live displaced far from their neighbors, families, and friends; with many businesses closing or relocating after the storms, there is yet a lack of jobs that pay a living wage; and health and mental health service providers continue to struggle to meet the needs of a population beleaguered by mental health issues directly related to the trauma of the storms and medical issues directly related to poverty and substandard housing conditions.

Over the past two years, NYRAG members and the wider New York philanthropic community have responded admirably to the needs of those in the hurricane-affected areas by providing more resources to the Gulf Coast than any other philanthropic community in the nation—more than $325 million for rescue, recovery, and rebuilding efforts.

But this is not enough. Voices remain unheard. Needs remain unmet.

We must continue to assist communities to promote policies that ensure an equitable rebuilding process. We must advocate for asset-building strategies that enable low-income people to take control over their lives. And we must provide resources, expertise, and support to those in the nonprofit community who are striving to help communities achieve these goals.

The first edition of the Donors' Guide to Gulf Coast Relief & Recovery was published in June 2006 with the purpose of providing a comprehensive and practical resource to those committed to funding in the Gulf Coast region. It was hoped that the Donors' Guide would encourage collaboration between funders and make more accessible the vast quantities of information around relief, recovery, and rebuilding in the Gulf Coast. Based on the feedback we received, we achieved our goal. We have heard from organizations across the country that funders, both large and small, have used the Donors' Guide as a means of sharing information with their peers, and to inform their funding decisions in the Gulf Coast. In response to requests from grantmakers, NYRAG has continued to gather information from New York-area grantmakers on philanthropic activity in the Gulf Coast for the purpose of creating a second edition of the Donors' Guide.

We hope the philanthropic community will continue its commitment to the Gulf Coast region and that the second edition of the Donors' Guide to Gulf Coast Relief & Recovery provides some of the information required to inform philanthropic practices in a region that needs our support for many years to come.

Sincerely,

Erica Hunt

I Funding Categories

Section 1 of the NYRAG Donors' Guide to Gulf Coast Relief & Recovery contains categorized information regarding nonprofit organizations that are working, or have worked, with populations affected by Hurricanes Katrina and Rita. All nonprofit organizations listed have received funding from NYRAG members or other New York area funders.

Information is listed alphabetically within the following funding categories:

Advocacy, Social Justice, and Equity

Aging and Disabled Populations

Arts, Culture, and Education

Community and Economic Development

Environment

Health and Mental Health

Housing

Hunger and Poverty

Immediate Disaster Relief

Intermediaries

Women, Children, and Families

For additional information about the nonprofit organizations listed in Section 1, please refer to the alphabetical listing of nonprofit organizations in Section 2. Section 2 also contains information about the NYRAG members and other New York area funders that made grants to these organizations.

“Save Our Neighborhood. No Bulldozing!”
October 2005

In the weeks following Hurricane Katrina, government officials ordered the demolition of damaged, unoccupied homes in New Orleans’ Lower 9th Ward. On October 15th, 2005 members of the Louisiana Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now (ACORN) staged a caravan into the Lower 9th Ward to claim their right to return and placarded hundreds of homes with “No Bulldozing” signs.

ADVOCACY, SOCIAL JUSTICE, AND EQUITY

“Since its inception, the Twenty-First Century Foundation has been committed to social justice for Black communities. When we established our Hurricane Katrina Fund, we felt it was critical for our grantmaking to provide immediate support for poor, working and middle class Black people to enable them to assert their voices and power early in the Gulf Coast rebuilding process and to push for just and equitable rebuilding strategies. It became clear very quickly that strategies such as litigation and community organizing were required to provide all with equal opportunities to rebuild, and to push for transparency in the rebuilding process. It is frightening to think what might have happened had such strong voices and organizations not existed—a ‘free market’ recovery where those with financial resources could rebuild and where everyone else is left behind and vilified for not getting their lives together.”

— Rev. John Vaughn, The Twenty-First Century Foundation

AGING AND DISABLED POPULATIONS

“One of the crises created when Hurricanes Katrina and Rita struck the Gulf Coast in 2005 was displacement—thousands of people were forced to move from their homes and in some cases relocate to other states.

The elderly community was particularly impacted. And there were elderly evacuees who, because their incomes and assets had been reduced or eliminated, were now eligible for government benefits—benefits that would make a huge difference in their lives at a critical time—and they weren’t aware of it.

The National Council on Aging (NCOA), with a $500,000 grant from the Atlantic Philanthropies, addressed this problem by developing a special version of BenefitsCheckUp, its web-based benefits screening tool. NCOA, working with government and relief agencies, trained staff to assist the elderly to use the tool so they could qualify for Medicare and Medicaid, food stamps, state pharmacy assistance, and other entitlements.

In the end, the agencies helped 1,419 clients to enroll in benefit programs, qualifying for services worth $2.3 million annually and $10.6 million over their lifetimes. This was an example of a need being met with a combination of funding, technology, knowledge and compassion—a real success story for our grantee.”

ARTS, CULTURE, AND EDUCATION

“The Fertel Foundation is energized by a passion for weaving ideas and people together, and is especially interested in initiatives that challenge entrenched communities of power and help new communities and new insights emerge. As a reflection of these interests, our education funding has concentrated on arts-centered after-school projects and the development of charter schools, and our funding in arts and culture has supported projects in theater, feature film, and documentary film.

Since our first forays into grantmaking after Katrina, the goal of the Fertel Foundation’s funding in New Orleans has been twofold: 1) to bring back New Orleans as it was; 2) to bring New Orleans back without the oppressive hierarchies and racism that existed before. Impossible of course, but ‘if man’s reach should not exceed his grasp, then what’s a heaven for. . . ?’”

—Randy Fertel, The Fertel Foundation and The Ruth U. Fertel Foundation

This artist’s rendition of Teche Ridge exhibits the Southern Mutual Help Association’s new paradigm for recovery and strengthening of rural communities. It is a 50-acre housing development on Teche Ridge, Louisiana, an area of New Iberia that has never flooded. This pioneering effort for rural development will feature smart-growth, traditional neighborhood design made for mixed-use and for mixed-income residents. Built with greener and more hazard resistant construction techniques, it will provide 554 housing units, with one-fourth of those units set aside as affordable housing.

COMMUNITY AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

“The F.B. Heron Foundation is supporting Gulf Coast recovery efforts that help low-income families to build assets and take control over their lives, and to make decisions for themselves and their families. An outstanding example is Southern Mutual Help Association (SMHA), which has helped nearly 700 families rebuild their homes in often-neglected rural communities. Working comprehensively towards equitable, long-term rebuilding in the region, SMHA has also helped area businesses and community facilities to rebuild, providing jobs and improved quality of life opportunities.”

Cypress grove and the New Orleans skyline.

The marshes, cypress swamps and barrier islands that protect the shores and cities of Gulf Coast states are disappearing at a rate of roughly one football field nearly every 30 minutes. Though Hurricanes Katrina and Rita destroyed some of this land, the main causes are saltwater intrusion brought on by man-made navigation channels and canals and the reduction in sediment deposits that levees and dams along the Mississippi River prevent from reaching the Gulf.

Since the founding of New Orleans, the shoreline of the Gulf of Mexico has advanced 20 miles and Louisiana has lost 30 percent of its coastal wetlands. A mere 100 yards of cypress trees can reduce wave energy by as much as 95 percent, underscoring the importance of environmental regeneration and stewardship as the best protection against future storms.

ENVIRONMENT

“The Gulf Coast Fund was formed in the weeks after Katrina by a consortium of foundations that knew it would be important to provide communities with accurate information about potential toxic exposure. Our first grant was given to conduct independent monitoring of soil and water and to provide returning families with protective gear. As with issues of poverty and injustice, Katrina laid bare the toxic legacy and coastal destruction caused by decades of abuse and neglect of the Gulf Coast’s environment and communities. We believe that environment and human rights are integrally linked, and the Gulf Coast Fund prioritizes projects that demonstrate or recognize this link. The Gulf Coast Fund is about protecting every person’s right not to be internally displaced, to live in a safe and healthy environment, and to have a role in preserving the future of the region. Donors who have funded community recovery and redevelopment must protect their investment by ensuring a healthy and sustainable coastal region.”

—Annie Ducmanis, The Gulf Coast Ecological Health and Community Renewal Fund

HEALTH AND MENTAL HEALTH

“Like everyone else, we were grappling with the disaster’s magnitude and asking ourselves what our role should be. We looked to individuals and organizations on the ground in the Gulf Coast to help channel funds where they were most needed—organizations like the Foundation for the Mid South, the Baton Rouge Area Foundation, and Christian Health Ministries. And we pooled our resources with other funders, through vehicles such as Grantmakers in Aging’s Hurricane Fund for the Elderly. We felt the sense of urgency and expedited funds to help bolster the groups providing critically needed health and mental health services in the region. But we also tried to be thoughtful about longer-term needs, especially in the area of mental health—one of our most recent grants supports a grassroots effort in New Orleans to create the kind of mental health and resilience services that citizens will trust and use.”

HOUSING

“In the aftermath of the disaster, The Annie E. Casey Foundation (Casey) offered to assist with immediate relief and longer-term recovery in ways that emanate from our mission to strengthen and support families living in communities of concentrated poverty. We had over a decade of experience working with Louisiana leaders prior to the storms and the relationships we forged laid the groundwork for our recent support. Casey has worked in tandem with a host of other funders in the Living Cities consortium to direct resources for recovery and rebuilding, of which affordable housing is a major component. Our priority is to ensure responsible redevelopment that engages and benefits community residents. Living Cities selected PolicyLink to help shape the policy environment for rebuilding in the Gulf Coast. PolicyLink is a group based in Oakland, California that works with local and national partners to promote equitable development. They helped to connect residents to resources and information via www.louisianarebuilds.info, an interactive web-based tool. The objective for all of these investments has been to ensure that the interests of low-income children and families are kept at the forefront throughout the recovery process.”

HUNGER AND POVERTY

“AmeriCares was on the ground within days of the hurricanes with our disaster response team. Although communication was difficult we were able to follow the evacuee flow and supply makeshift clinics and shelters with medical and other donated supplies which is our primary mission. The level of donations both financial and in-kind allowed us to reach beyond our core business. We were able to work at several levels to meet the immediate needs of evacuees as well as support the longer term recovery of communities. Through quick turnaround small grants we supported soup kitchens serving evacuees and volunteers, food pantries and missions. In an effort to be as close to individuals as possible we worked with local agencies that were providing case management for residents to directly assist with utility payments, the purchase of materials and appliances for rebuilding, as well as other immediate needs. We recognized the increased level of uninsured residents and provided operating support to community clinics to help defray the costs of serving this increased caseload. We have renewed several of our grants already and will continue our support until our resources are depleted.”

IMMEDIATE DISASTER RELIEF

“In 2005, the Leary Firefighters Foundation (LFF) made a grant to the New Orleans Fire Department (NOFD) to purchase 15 rescue boats for deployment throughout the Crescent City. In February 2006, and again in August of that year, LFF staff members conducted fact-finding missions in New Orleans and learned that the NOFD continued to operate under emergency conditions—a finding that prompted LFF to turn its attention to supporting the restoration of firehouses. To date, the foundation has restored six firehouses and assisted in the refurbishment of nine others. The restoration of firehouses not only improves safety and morale for firefighters in New Orleans, but also goes a long way to ensuring residents have the protection and support they need to return to their homes and communities.”

INTERMEDIARIES

“The Ford Foundation funded institutions that help people living in poverty have a voice in the policies and practices that would shape the rebuilding of the regions affected by Hurricanes Katrina and Rita. One of the organizations giving these residents this opportunity is the Louisiana Disaster Recovery Foundation. Ford initially funded the LDRF to provide immediate relief and recovery assistance in Southwest Louisiana. Going beyond those first few weeks following the storms, Ford looked to the LDRF to lead the way in long-term efforts to bring equity and inclusion to Louisiana. It remains important for us to invest in institutions like the LDRF that are on the ground and committed to implementing improvement through policy change.”

“Seedco Financial has taken a special interest in the Southeast Louisiana commercial fishing industry. The majority of commercial fishermen are sole proprietors that support their families and communities solely through the seafood they harvest on the Gulf. However, between shrinking dockside prices, the increasing cost of diesel, and the continuing effects of the 2005 storms, this way of life has been significantly threatened. In response, Seedco Financial has been providing financial and technical assistance to commercial fishermen. Seedco Financial's newly opened Southeast Louisiana Fisheries Assistance Center, a one-stop shop for fisheries marketing, technical, social, and financial services, is the first of its kind in the state.”

WOMEN, CHILDREN, AND FAMILIES

“Immediately after the storms, the Ms. Foundation for Women established the Katrina Women’s Response Fund to promote the health, safety, and economic well-being of women, their families, and communities in the Gulf Coast. The Ms. Foundation knew that women and girls—particularly women of color and low-income women—would experience the aftermath of Katrina most acutely and so moved quickly to make grants to meet the immediate needs of women of color and low-income women in the region and ensure that their leadership and priorities would be central to the short- and long-term rebuilding process.

‘Since the hurricanes, our grantees have worked tirelessly to ensure an equitable, healthy future for their families and communities,’ says Sara K. Gould, President and CEO of the Ms. Foundation. One such organization is the United Houma Nation Relief Fund. Located at the direct intersection of Hurricanes Katrina and Rita, the Houma Indian tribe was devastated by the storms, leaving some 7,000 tribe members homeless, their houses completely destroyed by wind and water. Undaunted, Chief Brenda Dardar Robichaux quickly pulled the tribe’s resources together, providing assistance to thousands of Houma families by delivering furniture, food and hope, and offering the benefits of a tight-knit community. Ms. Foundation support enables Robichaux and the tribe to bolster support for women and children, including trauma counseling and education programs for young people and training for women in nontraditional careers such as construction. Following in the footsteps of the strong Houma women before her, Robichaux credits her ability to keep moving forward to her matrilineal heritage. She says, ‘Our women have been leaders. They’ve had to be strong and I’ve had to be strong.’”

A Review of Key Indicators of Recovery Two Years After Katrina

By Amy Liu and Allison Plyer

Reprinted with permission from The Brookings Institution Metropolitan Policy Program

Summary of Findings

A review of dozens of indicators of social and economic health as well as public services and infrastructure for the New Orleans region since Hurricane Katrina finds that:

The population of New Orleans and the region continues to rebound, but demographic shifts may be occurring, with fewer black students in the city and larger shares of Hispanic children in the outlying parishes.

U.S. postal statistics on households actively receiving mail indicate that the city has regained 66 percent of its pre-Katrina population number, up from 50 percent last year. But only 40 percent of students have returned to New Orleans public schools, and of these, a smaller share of black students.

The region's housing market has stabilized in the past year, especially in the least damaged suburban parishes.

The home-buying frenzy that took place in the region the first year after Katrina has slowed, and though home prices and rent levels remain high overall, they have leveled off. The exception is in Orleans and St. Bernard parishes, where home sale prices have dropped. Meanwhile, a considerably high number of properties are up for sale in the region, many of which may be in need of repair and not quickly inhabitable.

Two years after Katrina, the New Orleans regional economy is strong but has plateaued somewhat in the past year.

Many aspects of the region's economy—sales tax revenue, total employers, jobs, and labor force size—have been restored to at least 79 percent of pre-Katrina levels. In the core, the city enjoyed some growth in sales tax revenue, but continued to lose employers, seeing little growth in the labor force size over the past year. And, the region's unemployment rate is currently higher than it was one year ago.

Housing repairs and construction continued over the last year, but repairs to essential infrastructure have largely stalled and public services are still limited.

The pace of demolitions and new housing construction approvals has increased, while residential repairs have slowed as the Road Home program has awarded checks to only one-quarter of applicants. Basic services—including schools, libraries, public transportation, and childcare—remain at less than half of the original capacity in New Orleans, and only two-thirds of all licensed hospitals are open in the region. Further, lack of repairs to public facilities is undermining police effectiveness.

In sum, two years after Hurricane Katrina and the subsequent levee failures, the city of New Orleans (and its metro area) has bounced back, recovering most of its population and economic base. Yet, progress in the past year has slowed, basic services and infrastructure remain thin, and stark disparities loom between the recovery of Orleans and St. Bernard parishes and the rest of the region.

Other Funders

The Donors' Guide to Gulf Coast Relief & Recovery chronicles grants made by NYRAG members and other New York-area funders only. Many funders from other regions maintain a strong commitment to Gulf Coast recovery. NYRAG encourages collaboration with these and other foundations and corporate grantmakers with a footprint in the region.
