Working together to help communities thrive

2022 was a year that started with promise, as vaccines lifted the veil of the pandemic. However, new coronavirus variants and the war in Ukraine quickly changed the year's tone. Over the following months, disasters continued to increase in scale, with many communities facing the devastating impacts of natural hazard events, such as hurricanes, earthquakes, floods and wildfires, and protracted humanitarian crises. Despite competing demands, philanthropy continued to be generous, with many organizations and individuals stepping up to provide much-needed support.

At the Center for Disaster Philanthropy, we met the challenges of 2022 with a determination to advance our efforts to improve the support we provide to donors, grantmakers and our community partners. We launched two international funds – the Ukraine Humanitarian Crisis Recovery and the Global Hunger Crisis Funds. We also advised and advocated for equitable recovery for those affected by Hurricanes Fiona and Ian and other domestic disasters.

Early in 2022, we started defining our 2023–2025 strategy by first evaluating ourselves. This assessment took two forms: First, an interview process of our board, clients, staff and donors, led by an external consultant. And then, the Center for Effective Philanthropy completed our first grantee perception report, asking our grantee partners if we are delivering on our commitment to marginalized communities. Spoiler alert: We are (and will continue to do so!).

A growing and fully dispersed team, CDP staff spent a few days at an all-staff retreat to brainstorm how to advance our mission best. Much of what we learned during those days together will aid us as we seek to implement our new strategy. As a result of the conversations held, our strategy is equal parts aspirational and pragmatic, guided by newly developed organizational values. We also learned that CDP needed to commit to and invest further in its staff and board to ensure we are prepared for and well-positioned to further our anti-racist journey.

CDP remains committed to advancing philanthropy's support for equitable, local recovery after disasters so communities can rebuild and thrive. We will continue to draw attention to those most vulnerable to the impact of disasters, such as communities of color, low-income families and other marginalized groups, as we did in 2022 with 117 grants to 99 grantee partners working in 36 countries.

In the coming years, CDP will continue to mobilize philanthropy around the importance of greater investments in local recovery efforts. Together, we will work to ensure that the most marginalized members of society are not left behind.

SUPPORTING COMMUNITIES TO THRIVE

Disasters exacerbate vulnerabilities from systemic inequities and injustices that Black, Indigenous and other people of color; people with disabilities; older adults; women and girls; and other marginalized populations continue to experience on a daily basis.

Successful recovery is not just about restoring services and structures. It entails addressing the root causes of vulnerabilities so that, ultimately, all people and communities can thrive after disasters strike.

In 2022, we supported community-driven efforts to help communities in the U.S. and worldwide recover from previous years' disasters and from the Afghanistan earthquake, Hurricanes Ian and Fiona, low-attention disasters, the Ukraine war, and other recent crises.

Through our consulting services and educational resources, we helped individuals, families, corporations and foundations do the same.

RACIAL AND INTERSECTIONAL EQUITY

In November 2022, as part of our continuing racial and intersectional (RIE) journey, the board and staff adopted a set of new organizational values that guide our work and our aspirations for doing better.

Our first-ever Grantee Perception

Report (GPR) conducted by the Center for Effective Philanthropy found that we're on the right path to achieving our mission and commitment to RIE. Most of our grantee partners (81%) indicated that our grants benefitted underserved and marginalized populations such as communities of color, the economically disadvantaged, people with disabilities, and women and girls.

Our GPR gave us many reasons to celebrate while identifying what we need to work on, from increasing our multi-year grants and non-monetary support to enhancing grantee partner communications.

We continued examining our systems and processes and began addressing what needed changing, from style guides and grantmaking procedures to internal policies and staffwide learning opportunities. We launched a new website that adheres to WCAG 2.1 Level A standards to make our content more accessible.

The team at Culture Aid NOLA knows that the systemically marginalized population they serve finds it difficult to evacuate or shelter in place when a disaster affects their area. So they rallied community and national partners and set out to prepare their constituents for hurricane season with supplies they needed to shelter safely through a storm.

We thank all our donors and partners for helping communities in the U.S. and worldwide rebuild, recover from and withstand disasters and humanitarian crises.

FINANCIALS

In 2022, there was a notable increase in general operations grants to CDP from major donors like Bohemian Foundation, Crown Family Philanthropies, The Fidelity Charitable Trustees' Initiative, eBay Foundation, Google.org, Klarman Family Foundation, The Irene W. and C.B. Pennington Foundation, St. Joseph Community Partnership Fund and UKG. Partners like these have enabled us to provide educational resources for donors, support numerous organizations and help communities in their equitable disaster recovery.

The increase in contributions and grants, program services expenses and net assets in 2020 are primarily a result of the COVID-19 Response Fund. The increase in contributions and grants in 2022 are primarily a result of the Ukraine Humanitarian Crisis Recovery Fund, the Atlantic Hurricane Season Recovery Fund and a new three-year grant to continue the Midwest Early Recovery Fund. The increase in in-kind contributions in 2022 is primarily due to online advertisements and legal fees.
